512th aircrew aids March medics in training

Tech. Sgt. Mick Callahan, 326th Airlift Squadron loadmaster (center), helps members of the 452nd Aeromedical Evacuation Squadron, March Air Reserve Base, Calif., unload a "patient" off a C-17 Globemaster III during an aeromedical evacuation exercise May 7-9. The 326th AS provided the airlift for the medical team, allowing them to train in a real-world environment.

New lodging policy for reservists

As of April 1, an updated Air Force lodging policy has the potential to put a dent in a reservist's pocket book.

The former lodging policy did not financially penalize the servicemembers for not making their unit training assembly lodging reservations in advance.

Now, reservists need to make reservations in advance or risk paying for last-minute reservations, said Senior Master Sgt. Raenita Monroe, 512th Airlift Wing lodging point-of-contact representative.

During the summer months, reservists who make last-minute reservations could end up paying more than $200 per night, said Amanda Young, 512th Memorial Affairs Squadron lodging office assistant.

"If a servicemember doesn't follow the new guidelines, they can be subject to administrative action," said Sergeant Monroe.

The Anne Arundel County Police Foundation recognized 512th Airlift Wing Command Chief Master Sgt. William T. Wild III at the 18th annual awards banquet held in Glen Burnie, Md., May 12.

Chief Wild received the silver star award, the department's second-highest honor, for risking his life to save an individual from their burning vehicle July 3, 2009.

"This is something that I'd like to think anyone would do," said Chief Wild. "While I appreciate being recognized, I never thought of it as an act of heroism. I was the first officer to respond to that call and was just doing my job."

Responding to a vehicle accident at 2:30 a.m., Chief Wild learned that one of the drivers involved was unconscious and still inside the automobile as it burst into flames. He proceeded to rescue the victim, who was wedged between the front and rear seats.
